I can't even think now how it came my way. For about three months it was on my Kindle, and then about five days ago I started reading it... I was writing to friends to recommend it within half an hour. It is what I might call a delightful read, with some hilarious moments, a panoply of odd characters (including the author himself, I guess) and a series of encounters that makes you wonder how you've ever survived living on land without dying of boredom. I want to sail and go to sea (and know nothing about boats), and love being near the sea, but cannot get to her often enough... So this book fulfilled many needs simultaneously: that of taking me across waters on an exploratory journey, that of being a true account (impossible to simply imagine most of this) of the life of two people who have a dream and endeavour to make it come true, that of being a pleasant read, without gore and horror, and finally, it is well-written, in careful, fluid, and rich language. I would love to meet the people, and the book has a mark of inspiration. I hope that many others will read this light, colourful and witty account of their experience. I loved it.

Kurzbeschreibung 'We didn't want to be wiping porridge off the walls - we wanted places no rougher than a farm pond. The silence in these places was complete - so much so that we found ourselves speaking in whispers.' Many sailors dream of a quiet life living aboard a classic yacht. Few reach that dream following the same path as Justin Ruthven-Tyers and his wife. After a fire destroyed everything they owned, the couple decided to build their own classic sailing yacht and live aboard in the wilds of Scotland - up creeks, in rocky pools, in lovely desolate places whose descriptions would make any armchair traveller ache to go there. They started their new life by felling trees for the timber they needed to build their boat, the first unusual step in their unique story. With a wonderful turn of phrase, Justin's humorous narrative will engage those who dream of living a similar lifestyle, and inspire those motivated to attempt it. Pressestimmen I have been in tears several times - mostly of laughter, and once out of sympathy... Every now and again you come across a book the world needs to read, and this is one of them. -- Jenni Davis This thoroughly readable book captures the interest from the first page and allows the reader to share in detail the sailing life of two most unusual and enterprising people. Cruising The simple pleasures of finding new places, beautiful sunsets, collecting firewood and meeting new people are beautifully detailed and the book is a true inspiration.
