Radical! but makes bible prohecy amazingly acceptable.Von Ein KundeThe evidence as outlined in this book for a hihger power that is determining the fate and development for a global economy is very strong. A significant rebutal attempt would be a very difficult task, considering the events that has occurred since its first publication. Literal interpretations of bible prophecy makes this book very radical. But when compared to historical and current global political events, trends and development, 'radical' seems insufficient to explain the globalisation phenomena and the possible contributions in this book. With the book's extrapolation of these trends, in particular to developing peace talks surrounding Israel and the rebuilding of a European empire and their significance in a balance in world peace and power, it makes it even easier to accept bible prophecy, making it easier to have faith in good, GOD. Very good book, and will make good interesting conversation within all race, class and creed on a wide variety of topics. It is also guaranteed to bring the reader closer to a spiritual way of living life!

Von Ein Kunde I like this book for the sake of the biblical prophecies, but at times the author seems to think man does not need to be responsible for his planet because he has dominion over it, he criticizes recycling, responsibility for the planet, and ourselves, he also seems to think people are starving in Africa because of lack of technology while it is precisely because all of their food is exported to the United States where he assumes man is automatically good, I can understand his crusade against the new age because of the self glorification and rejection of God, but I don't understand his hate for responsible "dominion" over this planet.

read pages 86-91, anyway I think it's a great interpretation of bible prophecy but a poor display at times of the author's values. I doubt Jesus wanted us to rape the planet, create smog everywhere, all for the sake of individual happiness and freedom, this sounds quite egocentric, and far from Christian values.

Von Ein Kunde Filled with interesting information however, Jeffrey does not give his sources for his information. The information does get repetitive almost as if he were writing a report for school and had to meet the minimum word count. He spends a lot of time explaining how our government has a part in setting up for the end of the world and at times seems rather pessimistic. Better selections would be books by John Hagee
