KennedyI walked into a Christian book store, and asked for a book critiquing Catholicism from a Protestant point of view. I was told, "We don't have anything like that, but this book is pretty balanced." What I got was not a balanced book, but exactly what I asked for.This book sets out to compare Catholicism vs. Protestantism in light of recent ecumenical movements, and aims to persuade the reader that 1) The two are still very different, and 2) Protestantism is correct. It is a poor tool for persuading Catholics of the error of their ways. Certain Biblical passages supporting the Catholic viewpoint are either ignored or quoted out of context. The only people who will be persuaded are those who already agree--"preaching to the choir" as it were. In fact, reading with a skeptical eye and referencing an actual Bible as appropriate, I left feeling like Catholicism was the winner of the debate as presented. Any Protestant looking for a decent critique of Catholicism should look elsewhere, as should Catholics looking apologetics. That being said, the book does touch on the main points of disagreement, and could prove a useful introduction to someone who is unfamiliar with these two branches of the Christian faith.

This book gives valuable insight to both Protestants and Catholics about the issues that have divided these two groups for four centuries. It demonstrates how reconciliation can only occur if one side or the other changes their doctrines on the word of God and salvation. One of the crucial issues is the Catholics having to reconcile the anathemas given at the council of Trent. Until these issues are reconciled what should the relationship between Catholics and Protestants be? This book will give both groups the tools necessary as to what types of relationships they should have that do not damage to the truth of the Biblical text.

This book was not a real easy read. It was very repetitive. I did get a lot of understanding as to what Catholics believe and how much of their beliefs are based on church tradition instead of Biblical truths. The Catholic church has been perpetuating these half truths and misteaching too long to change now and not admit major error. Salvation by works and not by grace alone, is a major issue and Catholics can never admit they are wrong. Even though the Bible is very clear on this subject. We are saved by the Grace of God alone it is a free gift!
